This testimony was given by Captain D. W. Kilburn, of the Sixth Captain D. W. Kilburn, of the Sixth Infantry, regarding the Twenty-fith Infantry at Fort Brown. The same witness declared that citizens of Brownsville made threats that they would run negro troops out of town if they were brought there to supplant white troops, and on this point he was corroborated by Lleutenant Edwin Thompson, who was quartermaster of the same pegiment at Fort Brown. Testimony also was given concerning the bullets taken from the walls of houses in Brownsville after the affray, and it was developed that these bullets might have been army ammunition intended for Springfield rifles and fired by Mauser rifles, which, acand fired by Mauser rifles, which, according to previous witnesses, were in common use in Brownsville.

On cross-examination by Senator Warner, the witness said that it was not difficult for a soldier to obtain a not difficult for a soldier to obtain a few extra cartridges, nor was it unusual for soldiers to lose one or two from their allowance. He sa tle second ground of de-murrer, that the bill presented no cause for contest, was not sustained cause for contest, was not sustained by the facts. He quoted a long line of cases on this. He wild that this suit was not at all projudicial to West Virginia, and that the fact that the suit would absolve Virginia from all further obligation under the bonds made it as important as if they were actually and off. As is the argument made it as important as if they were actually paid off. As the argument that the Legislature of Virginia had not properly authorized the bringing of the suit, he said that there could be no doubt of full authorization. The last objection, that there was a compact between Virginia and West Virginia which prescribed the mode of settlement, he held that Virginia had not been a party to it, not even the fictitious Virginia, because the Constitution to which the restored Virginia assented was not the one finally

Carlisle Under Cross-Fire.

Ex-Secretary Carlisle started out by saying that the compact between Virginia and West Virginia was valid and had been recognized by every branch of the Federal government. He then argued that the court could not take jurisdiction, because it would interfere with the autonomy of a State if it attempted to dictate to a Legislature that it should provide for the payment of certain money.

He held that Virginia has already extinguished her indebtedness and that the bonds were cancelled. At this point justice Harlan remarked that the State of Virginia seemed to be simply holding the bonds in true. Carlisle decrease in true. Mr. Carlisle said that the Virg Commission were still bound by the Mr. Carlisle said that the Virginia Commission were still bound by the act of 1894, which Attorney-General Anderson denied. Chief Justice Puller hero asked if the West Virginia Legislature thad ever made any effort to settle, to which it was replied it had disclaimed owing any part of the indebtedness. He held the compact between the restored State of Virginia and West Virginia was binding. Justice Holmes remarked that it might be that that compact might not be binding. To this Mr. Carlisle replied that if it was not, then West Virginia is not in the Union. He said that Fairfax Harrlson had decided that West Virginia owed one-third, because one-third of the white population was in the new State; that the darkles of old Virginia did not count. Justice Holmes impuired if it were not true that the Legislature of West Virginia had repeatedly denied the liability, and this was admitted.

Treasurer Gets Clerk. Mr. Wood, of Jefferson Ward, asked for a suspension of the rules in order to take up the ordinance proposing to previde an extra clerk in the City Treasurer's office. The Board voted to suspend the rules.

Mr. Wood then made a plea for the passage of the ordinance, asserting that the city actually paid the Treasurer only $2.040 a year, and that the portion of this actually paid by the city to the Treasurer was only $850.

Mr. Turpin vigorously oposed the proposition, contending that the office was a two-headed one, the service of the Treasurer to the city and the State was one and the same, and that as-a the Treasurer to the city and the state was one and the same, and that as a matter of fact, the Treasurer actually derived $6,000 to $7,000 from the office, and this was amply sufficient. The office was not a difficult one to fill, and the adoption of the ordinance would mean further increase of the Treasurer's profits by nearly $1,000.

Despite the objections stated by Mr. Turpin, the Baard concurred in the action of the Common Council by the ware majority required, the vote being as follows:

Annexed Territory.

When the ordinance proposing the creation of a special joint committee for apportionment of the funds available for the improvement of the annexed portion of the city among the various wards and localities came up for concurrence, it encountered vigorous opposition from President Turpin, who made a forceful argument against it. Mr. Turpin called attention to the fact that it consisted of only seven men, and was therefore, smaller ment against it. Mr. Turpin called attention to the fact that it consisted of only seven men, and was, therefore, smaller than any other committee; that it partook of the functions of every other committee, and to some extent encroached upon the prerogatives of cach. The most important point made was that, though created estensibly for the period during which the money raised by the $500,000 issue of bonds was being expended, the new and wonderful committee was, in fact, perpetual, and would recur to vex and embarrass, the other committees hereafter. Mr. Turpin referred to it as a hydra-headed committee, and asked why this small committee was entrusted with such extraordinary powers, and why it was to be created at all.

Mr. Eilett, for the committee reporting it, defended the ordinance and the committee proposed, claiming that it would greatly relieve the members of the other committees of much detail work; that the committee was entrusted with the expenditure of no money or funds, and was merely to recommend where improvements should be made, subject to approval by the Council.

After some further discussion the or-ments should be made, subject to approval by the Council.

After some further discussion the ordinance was adopted, and now goes to the Mayor. The vote was:

The usual reports of city officers were received and filed.

During the roll-call for presentation of petitions, motions, resolutions and ordinances.
